Temporary marriage is a temporary marriage upon agreement of the two parties. This temporary marriage was at the beginning of Islam. According to the Islamic law, temporary marriage is allowed if the couple agrees to it, and the women are adults. However, there are some considerations that should be taken into account before entering into such a marriage.

In Sunni Islam, temporary marriage is called mutah or temporary marriage. It is allowed for a limited time and under special terms. In Shia Islam, temporary marriage is called mutah or temporary marriage as well. However, the conditions and rules for entering into a temporary marriage differ between the two sects.

Temporary marriage is not allowed for Muslim women, and it is only available to Muslim men. The purpose of temporary marriage is to fulfill sexual desires on either side, and it is mainly for that reason.

In Shia Islam, temporary marriage is permitted at the time of the Prophet Muhammad PBUH, and it is being promoted in Iran by an unlikely alliance of conservative clerics and feminists. However, it is not favored in Sunni Islam.

Temporary marriage is a topic of discussion in the Islamic community, and there are different opinions on whether it is permissible or not. Some scholars argue that it is permissible, while others believe that it is not. In general, temporary marriage is considered a controversial and sensitive issue in the Islamic world.
